

How to tame health care costs when you retire

Fidelity Viewpoints | Market & Economy

Why advance planning is critical and may help lower costs

Most of us look forward to retirement as a time to shift gears, worry less, and enjoy a slower pace of life. But that rosy picture can quickly change and include some sticker shock as retirement nears, especially when it comes to paying for health care.

In a recent Fidelity survey,<sup>1</sup> almost 7 in 10 people approaching retirement said they were worried about outliving their savings, the effect of inflation, and the cost of medical care.

And no wonder. Health care costs have been rising at more than twice the rate of inflation, averaging 6.9% since 1960.<sup>2</sup> As the chart below shows, retirees now spend more on health care than they do on food. If that trend continues, health care will be retirees' second-largest expense in just a few years, says Steven Feinschreiber, senior vice president of research at Fidelity Strategic Advisers, Inc.<sup>3</sup>

Retirees are now paying more for health care than food

Source: Strategic Advisers, Inc., 2008
Percentages may not equal 100% due to rounding

Plan for rising costs and a longer retirement

Although the cost of health care went down slightly in 2010 as new health care reform legislation was phased in,<sup>4</sup> this is only a temporary fix, says Brad Kimler, executive vice president of Fidelity's Benefits Consulting business. "Today's workers still face the prospect of significant medical expenses in retirement, as health care expenses continue to increase due to higher costs for medical services, the introduction of new technology, and an increased utilization of health care services like diagnostic testing," he explains.

As life expectancies increase and people spend more years in retirement, the money set aside to pay for health care will have to last longer as well. Clearly, factoring in health expenses has become a critical part of retirement planning. Fortunately, there are steps you can take to ease your mind – and your budget – so you arrive at retirement with potentially fewer worries about managing your health care costs.

1. Understand your health insurance options

To take control of your health care expenditures, “You need to educate yourself in terms of what your options for health expense coverage are: what you need, where you can get it, and the cost for that coverage,” says Sunit Patel, senior vice president of Fidelity Benefits Consulting. That education starts with understanding what your options for health insurance will be once you retire.

For most retirees, leaving full-time employment will mean leaving health care coverage behind. Today, only 28% of firms with 200 or more employees (and just 3% of small firms) still offer retirement health care coverage.<sup>5</sup> Even then, the plan may differ dramatically from its pre-retirement version. There may be different deductibles, co-pays, or other limitations, and you may be sharing a larger amount, or all, of the cost of the premium with your former employer.

Medicare covers most retirees

While some people may have access to employer-provided retiree health care coverage, the government’s Medicare health insurance is still the primary source of coverage for American retirees. Most automatically qualify for basic Medicare hospital insurance (known as Part A) as soon as they reach age 65. This coverage costs nothing if you or your spouse paid Medicare taxes during your working years.

On the other hand, Medicare medical insurance (known as Part B), which covers doctors’ services, outpatient hospital care, and some other medical services, such as physical and occupational therapy and some home health care, is not free. You pay a monthly premium for Part B and there’s no annual limit on your out-of-pocket expenses as there is with many private insurance policies.

Medicare Advantage plans combine Medicare Parts A and B and supplemental coverage into a single policy. They are privately managed and can offer lower premiums or better benefits than a traditional Medicare setup where each part is treated separately. But these plans also can limit you to using only network providers.

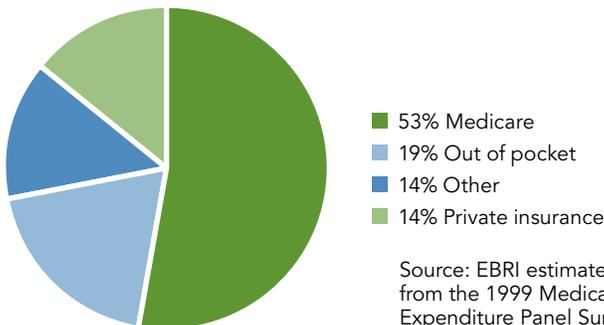

To cover prescription drugs, you also can purchase Medicare Part D prescription coverage to add to Part A, Part B, and your Medigap coverage, or as part of a Medicare Advantage plan.

Although it can be time consuming selecting coverage to supplement basic Medicare from the many private insurance options available in your state, it’s an exercise that can make a big difference in your costs.

The government’s Medicare site offers access to tools that help you compare coverage in your state and find insurers that offer the best value for your needs. Go to medicare.gov and select “Compare Drug and Health Plans.” And don’t forget to ask prospective insurers if they have options to help you keep costs down, like higher deductibles, discounts for healthy lifestyles, or using only in-network providers.

Sources of coverage for elderly health costs

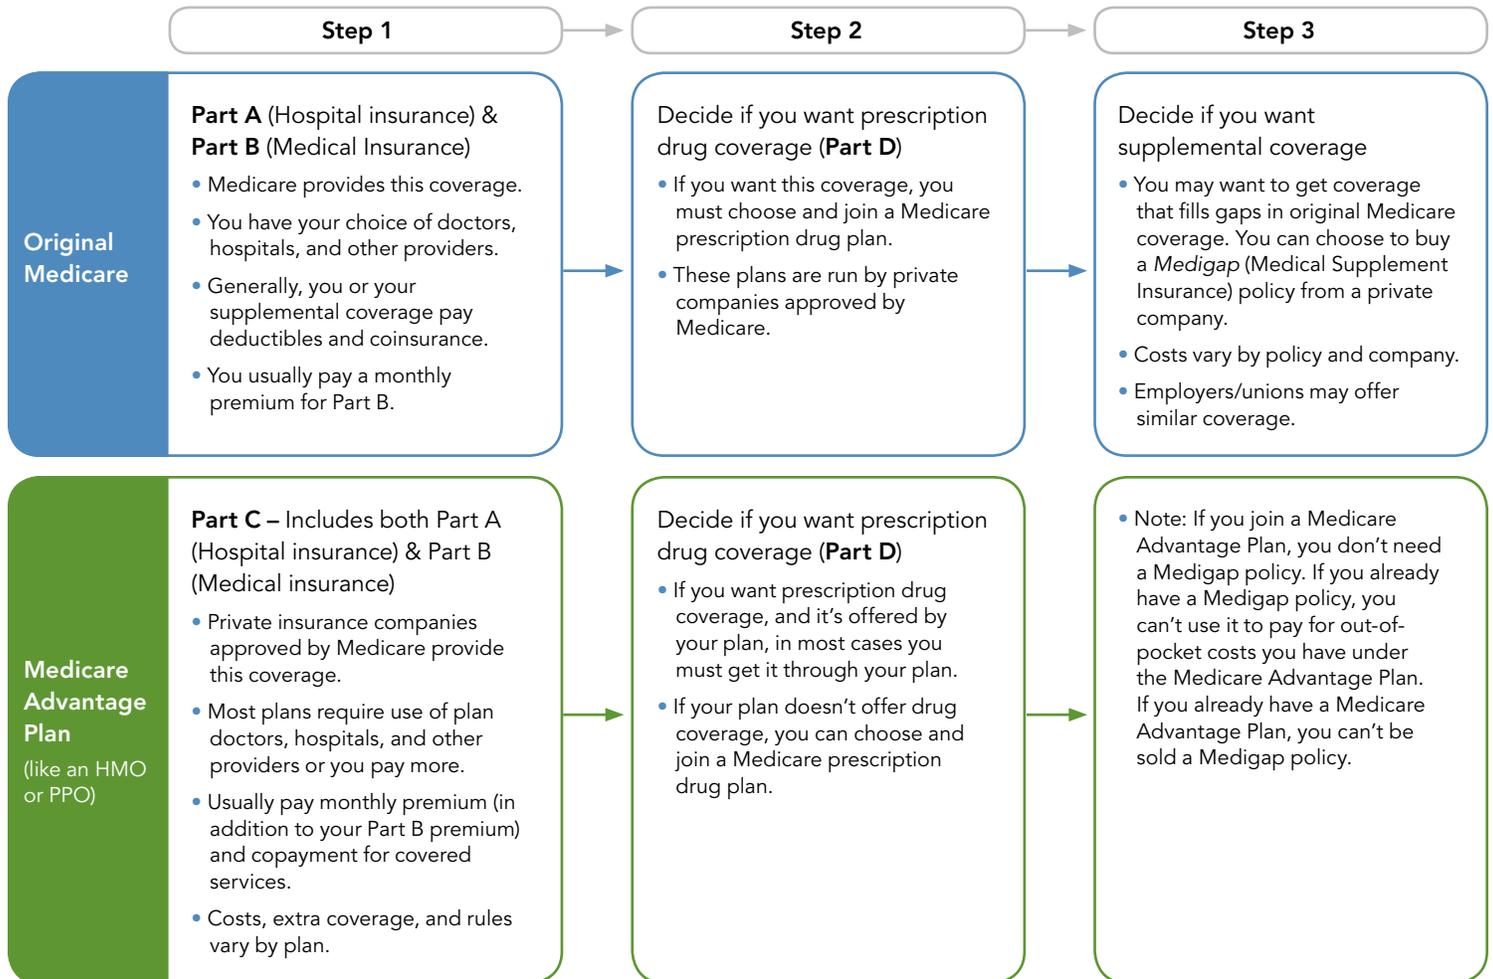

Medical expense coverage sources for Medicare beneficiaries age 65 and over

Source: EBRI estimates from the 1999 Medical Expenditure Panel Survey.

Choose the type of Medicare coverage that is best for you

Follow these steps to help you decide

Source: Medicare.gov, September 23, 2011.

What if you retire early?

If you retire before age 65, of course, you can't take advantage of Medicare right away. So if you don't have other coverage in the interim, you will need to find a source to pay for your medical insurance while you await eligibility for Medicare. In that case, you have a number of choices. Among them:

- Paying to continue your current employer coverage for a specified time under COBRA
- Joining your spouse's company health care plan

- Purchasing your own personal medical insurance policy
- Using Veteran's Administration benefits, if you are a veteran
- Using Medicaid, if you qualify

The government's new Early Retiree Reinsurance Program (ERRP) recently encouraged employers who had retiree health care plans to keep them so they could help early retirees and their dependents meet the higher costs of private health insurance coverage.<sup>6</sup>

So make sure you explore all of the employer options that might be available.

As with any important financial purchase, think about the costs and coverage of your policy before you buy it, and look at the premiums you can afford, the deductibles, the available hospitals and doctors, the plan's quality-ranking information, the covered benefits, and the out-of-pocket expenses you will pay. Higher deductibles generally lower your costs, but require you to pay more up front before your coverage kicks in.

2. Factor health care costs into your income planning

Once you have a better handle on the cost of the insurance coverage you'll need, you can begin looking at your health care costs along with your other essential retirement expenses. "On the financial side, you want to look closely at your anticipated medical costs as part of your larger income planning goal, because they are such an important and essential expense in retirement," says Patel.

Most online retirement planning tools can help you create a ballpark estimate of how much of your budget for essential expenses should be allocated to medical and health care costs.

You also can use Fidelity's annual Retiree Health Care Costs Estimate as a basis for planning. This estimate suggests that a 65-year-old couple retiring in 2011 would need $230,000 in total to pay for medical expenses throughout their retirement, not including nursing home or long-term care. That's equivalent to $645 monthly or $7,740 annually per person for health care expenses.<sup>7</sup> This figure covers the cost of insurance premiums for Medicare Part B coverage and Part D prescription benefits, plus out-of-pocket expenses for co-pays, deductibles, and miscellaneous home care costs. It doesn't include additional costs for treating chronic conditions such as heart disease, arthritis, or diabetes, nor does it account for the cost of a nursing home or long-term care facility.

It's also an average cost, to be used as a general guideline, because it applies only to a 65-year-old couple retiring in 2011, says Patel. "If you're younger, this is not the right number for you." To arrive at a figure that better reflects your personal situation, he suggests adjusting the number to take into account your family history and your health status, which might mean planning for a longer or shorter retirement and a larger or smaller total cost. For example, if a husband and wife live to be 92 and 94, respectively, the cost estimate from Fidelity grows to $430,000.<sup>1</sup>

You might want to earmark a portion of your budget for purchasing long-term care (LTC) insurance as well.<sup>8</sup> The cost is based on age, so the earlier you purchase a policy, the lower the annual premiums.

Whatever method you use to estimate your health care expenses, including them in your overall income planning helps you invest that amount appropriately so you can cover health care costs without having to sell or liquidate investments unnecessarily.

3. Take advantage of all possible funding sources

In addition to any employer-sponsored benefits, your retirement accounts, and personal savings, you may have other sources to help meet health care costs in retirement.

For example, if you have a Health Savings Account (HSA) that sets aside pretax money to be used only for health care expenses (and can be withdrawn tax free), make sure you factor those assets into your planning calculations. On the other hand, if you haven't yet taken advantage of your employer's HSA, think about using it to begin saving now on a tax-favored basis. Because you don't have to use the money right away, it can be set aside to cover qualified medical expenses in retirement – and you'll be able to withdraw it free of income taxes in the future.

"Health Savings Accounts are a smart way to set aside funds specifically for medical needs," says Kimler. "HSAs have no 'use it or lose it' policies and are completely portable for individuals who change employers."

Other sources of funds that might be available to cover your health care expenses include:

- Voluntary Employee Beneficiary Association (VEBA) plans. These are tax-favored trusts set up to provide health benefits to employees of school districts, higher education, state agencies, and – more recently – union members. (The United Auto Workers [UAW] VEBA is the largest in the world.)
- Part-time work. Keeping health insurance benefits is one of the leading reasons retirees continue to work, according to the 2011 EBRI Retirement Confidence Survey.<sup>9</sup>

4. Be a smart health care consumer

“Being informed and proactive about choosing your health care providers and managing your care may be the most effective ways to control health care costs in retirement,” says Feinschreiber. He and his colleagues just completed an exhaustive study of the factors that influence the cost of health care in the United States. Their findings: Despite the complexity and confusion of health care pricing, it is possible to gather information on your health care product and service options so you can select those that offer the greatest value for your dollar. For example, he says, take the case of someone who breaks his arm. An emergency room visit could run $2,000 or more and could take many hours, while an urgent care facility might cost $200 for the very same care. “If you identify the best providers for safe and cost-effective solutions before care is needed, you can save a significant amount of time and money later on,” he explains. Feinschreiber suggests identifying in advance four types of providers to turn to in different situations: 1) a primary care physician, 2) a specialist for any existing conditions or special needs, 3) an urgent care provider, and 4) a full-service hospital. That way, you’ll know where to go for the care that offers you the most value.

Other ways to make sure you get the most from your health care dollars:

Be prepared. Be ready to give your provider the information that he or she needs – even to the point of writing down your questions or symptoms in advance of each visit. In addition to ensuring that your concerns are addressed efficiently (and you don’t forget something important), this also makes the best use of everyone’s time. Because physicians and facilities typically charge based on the time and complexity of a visit, this is even more important if you have a high-deductible health plan where you shoulder more of the up-front costs.

Ask the hard questions. Make sure you get a clear description of any diagnosis and the doctor’s proposed plan of care, free of confusing jargon. Ask about the benefits and risks of any procedures, and know what outcomes you can expect. See if any alternative treatments are available, and compare the cost and outcomes of those choices too. For example, would an outpatient procedure be a safe, effective, and lower-cost alternative to an overnight stay in a hospital? Would an X-ray be as good as an MRI for the situation? Again, if you’re paying a larger portion of the costs yourself with a high-deductible plan, these decisions do have an immediate effect on your wallet.

Know what you’re paying for. What are the charges, fees, and out-of-pocket costs you should expect for the recommended treatment plan? Are there any factors you should know about that could cause the anticipated expenses to increase? Remember, along with your patient privacy rights, you also have the right to know as much as you can about the medical services being recommended, and their costs.

Being a good health care “shopper” may also help you lower your out-of-pocket costs for prescription drugs. Even with improved Part D insurance plans (and the eventual demise of the “donut hole”), prescriptions can cost thousands of dollars a year if you’re treating a chronic condition. So check with your doctor or pharmacist to see if there are safe, efficient, and lower-cost alternatives to any brand-name drugs you’re using. Also, don’t assume that your health plan’s distributor offers the best price. Check your plan’s drug “formulary” against local retail drug stores and discount superstores and look into the benefits of purchasing frequently used prescription medications in larger quantities online.

One other interesting finding in Feinschreiber's research is that health care costs vary widely by geographical region. "In general, we found lower costs in the western and mountain regions of the U.S. and higher expenses in the eastern and mid-Atlantic states," he reports. And the differences were even more dramatic by state than by region.

For example, Arizona's per capita personal health care expenses were 78% of the national average while New York's were 124% – a difference of 46%. While he agrees that most people won't relocate just to beat high health care costs, Feinschreiber suggests that people who are thinking about living in a different state during retirement should take these numbers into account. To learn more about state and regional cost comparisons, check the reports online at the Centers for Medicare & Medicaid Services.<sup>10</sup>

Finally, "Don't underestimate the link between your health and your financial wealth," says Patel. "It's important to know what you can do to influence your costs and to understand how your good health may play a role. If you have a chronic health condition already, make sure you manage it by making recommended doctor visits, using medications correctly, and completing lab tests, and then, combine all of this with 'wellness' practices. Of course, if you're already healthy, do what you can so you stay that way."

Planning for health care expenses in retirement has never been more important. By carefully considering your needs, expenses, and financial resources ahead of time, you will likely be in a better position to handle the costs when retirement finally arrives.

Covering health care expenses is a critical part of retirement income planning. Talk now with your financial advisor to help make sure your future is protected.

Your Advisor and Fidelity

Insight
Diversification
Dedicated Support

Not NCUA or NCUSIF insured. May lose value. No credit union guarantee.

Past performance is no guarantee of future performance.

1. Fidelity's Retirement Mindset Research was conducted online among preretirees aged 55 or older. Data was collected by independent research firm Synovate between October 7 and 12, 2010. Synovate is not affiliated with Fidelity Investments. The results of this survey may not be representative of all investors meeting the same criteria as those surveyed for this study.
2. Centers for Medicare & Medicaid Services. 2010. Table 1: National Health Expenditures Aggregate: Selected Calendar Years 1960–2008 (NHE Web tables), accessed November 2010.
3. Society of Actuaries: The Financial Well-Being of American Retirees. Steven Feinschreiber, Senior Vice President, and James Laiosa, Senior Quantitative Analyst, Strategic Advisers, Inc., 2008.
4. The Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act requires pharmaceutical companies, beginning this year, to offer a 50% discount on brand-name drugs that fall into the so-called "donut hole." The Health Care and Education Reconciliation Act goes further to reduce out-of-pocket costs by phasing out the concept of the donut hole by 2020.
5. Only 28% of large firms with 200 or more workers offered retiree health insurance in 2010, down from 66% in 1988, according to a Kaiser Family Foundation survey of employers. And just 3% of small firms with from 3 to 199 workers have health plans for retirees.
6. Healthcare.gov, "The Affordable Care Act's Early Retiree Reinsurance Program."
7. Fidelity.com, September 23, 2011.
8. About 70% of those over age 65 will require some type of LTC services – either at home, or in adult day care, an assisted living facility, or a traditional nursing home. The average private-pay cost of a nursing home is about $70,000 per year and exceeds $100,000 in some states. Assisted living facilities average $34,000 per year. Hourly home care agency rates average $46 for a Medicare-certified home health aide and $19 for a licensed non-Medicare-certified home health aide.
9. Employee Benefit Research Institute, March 2011.
10. Centers for Medicare & Medicaid Services: U.S. Per Enrollee State Estimates by State of Residence. Percentages were calculated by Fidelity.

Fidelity does not provide legal or tax advice and the information provided above is general in nature and should not be considered legal or tax advice. Consult an attorney or tax professional regarding your specific legal or tax situation.

The information presented above reflects the opinions of the authors as of October 12, 2011. These opinions do not necessarily represent the views of Fidelity or any other person in the Fidelity organization, and are subject to change at any time based upon market or other conditions. Fidelity disclaims any responsibility to update such views. These views may not be relied on as investment advice and, because investment decisions for a Fidelity fund are based on numerous factors, may not be relied on as an indication of trading intent on behalf of any Fidelity fund.

Investment decisions should be based on an individual's own goals, time horizon, and tolerance for risk.

As with all of your investments, you must make your own determination whether an investment in any particular security or fund is consistent with your investment objectives, risk tolerance, financial situation, and your evaluation of the investment option. Fidelity is not recommending or endorsing any particular investment option by mentioning it in this presentation or by making it available to its customers. This information is provided for educational purposes only, and you should bear in mind that laws of a particular state and your particular situation may affect this information. There is no guarantee the trends discussed here will continue. Investment decisions should take into account the unique circumstances of the individual investor.

Past performance is no guarantee of future results. It is not possible to invest directly in an index or average. Index performance is not meant to represent that of any Fidelity mutual fund.

Fidelity Investments & Pyramid Design is a registered service mark of FMR LLC.